Think this points up the very cordial relationship that has always existed between BBC and FBIS.

Dear [Redacted]

I would like to place on record our appreciation of the really excellent work done by your Cyprus station in connection with the recent crises in Persia and Egypt. I have a note before me of some of the highlights of monitoring in the period July 21st to 26th, including the resignation of Ghavam and the abdication of King Farouk, from which it is evident that monitoring was well ahead of all other sources of information. Great appreciation has been expressed by our users, both in the Government and in the BBC, and there is no doubt that it is almost entirely due to the fine work done by your station in Cyprus, who were obviously on their toes throughout the whole of what must have been a very difficult period, and fed us with news snaps of a really high standard.

I am of course asking our Liaison Officer in Cyprus, Ian Wilson, to pass on our thanks to the people concerned, but I thought you also might like to have a note of how well things have gone for your own records.

I may add that although these recent events have highlighted the fine work being done by Kyrenia, reports both from our Liaison Officers and from our people here show that there is really excellent co-operation at all times, and we on our side are delighted that things are working so smoothly.

Yours sincerely,

R.D. Marriott
